

Gurbani kirtan, which is scriptural Divine Love poetry of the Sikh religion founders, and is more complex and mystical, musically. They are coming often to see what an American is going to bring to the music/kirtan that is the focus of their services and devotion. And they are inspiringly supportive....In Europe and the U.S., I have played more for yoga and new thought community audiences because these groups of people frequently are newly seeking spirituality. For them, I concentrate more on mantra and chant. It's a great joy to watch people express their AHA's, that come in their initial experiences. That is an important link point to so many avenues of spiritual exploration.

What are the similarities?

Everyone, no matter where you go, responds when you make the effort to come from your core and heart. I think people want that connection and can feel what is you being your honest self.

Are there artists that you would like to collaborate and/or work with that you haven't had the opportunity to do so far? Who?

There is great creative experimentation and stimulation I love, and new things to learn/derive in blending with another artist's stream of inspiration. But I have no one in particular artist at this point that I'm seeking to work with. I trust that whatever music spirit wants to be created, will choose the grouping of artists it wants to play through.

If you had one wish, what would it be?

There's a saying that goes, "be careful what you wish for, because you'll probably get it." I've seen that work positively and negatively. So my wish and prayer for all the people, friends, and family that I meet is that they live their highest destiny; that is what I strive to live, for myself.

Could you talk a little bit about your current plans/schedule for touring?

We are currently setting the schedule for a Winter/ Spring Tour, the first half of 2006; tentatively, we plan to visit New Mexico and Colorado in February, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and New York in March, Texas in April, Oregon, Washington and Vancouver in May, and California, intermittently, throughout the first half of 2006.

If you, the readers, are interested in having us come do kirtan in your area, please contact aubry@vampmusicsource.com. People can check the calendar on the Sacred Sounds Radio calendar page, and on the events page of www.satkartarmusic.com for our dates and events.
